Bitcoin Back At $8,000 Level Ahead Of This Week's ETF Decision

It was a wild week for Bitcoin. After recently breaching the $8000 level, the world's largest and most liquid digital currency slipped back to $7,000 over the last few days only to rally back to $8,000 on Sunday. After soaring more than 100% so far in 2019 (and over 50% in the past 30 days), Bitcoin has once again caught the attention of the mainstream press with CBS's 60 Minutes program set to expose the meteoric rise of the cryptocurrency to millions of viewers this evening.

In addition, the SEC is expected to deliver its decision on whether to approve or delay the VanEck Bitcoin ETF on Tuesday, May 21. Stay tuned!

CHART: Auto Loan Delinquencies Surge To 2009 Levels

According to the latest New York Fed data, cash-strapped Americans are falling behind on their auto loan payments -- by 90 days or more -- at the fastest pace since 2009. If consumers are facing such credit stress in this current economic environment of ultra-low interest rates and a tight labor market, it makes one wonder what things will look like when the economy actually faces higher interest rates. S&P 500 Index - Commentary

The S&P 500 index remains in a confirmed Position uptrend and remains supported by a new Long-Term uptrend. Stocks wobbled last week as the tensions between the U.S. and China grew sharper and more defined. The markets slipped deeper into the red just before Friday's market close on a news report that U.S.-China trade talks had stalled. Washington asserts that Beijing "renege" on an almost-ready trade deal while Beijing complains of Washington's "bullying" behavior. Regardless, the much-hyped trade talks appear to be at a standstill, which will likely continue to lie heavy on equity markets next week. Turning to the charts, the price action this week was choppy amid rising volatility. While the S&P 500 index continues to hold above its 200 DMA, it is notable that the index failed to hold its 50 DMA last week. That could serve as a meaningful resistance area next week. Despite all of the recent market "noise" the long-term market uptrend remains intact. (Keep reading)
