As U.S. Debt Soars, Fiscal Conservatives Remain Utterly Silent

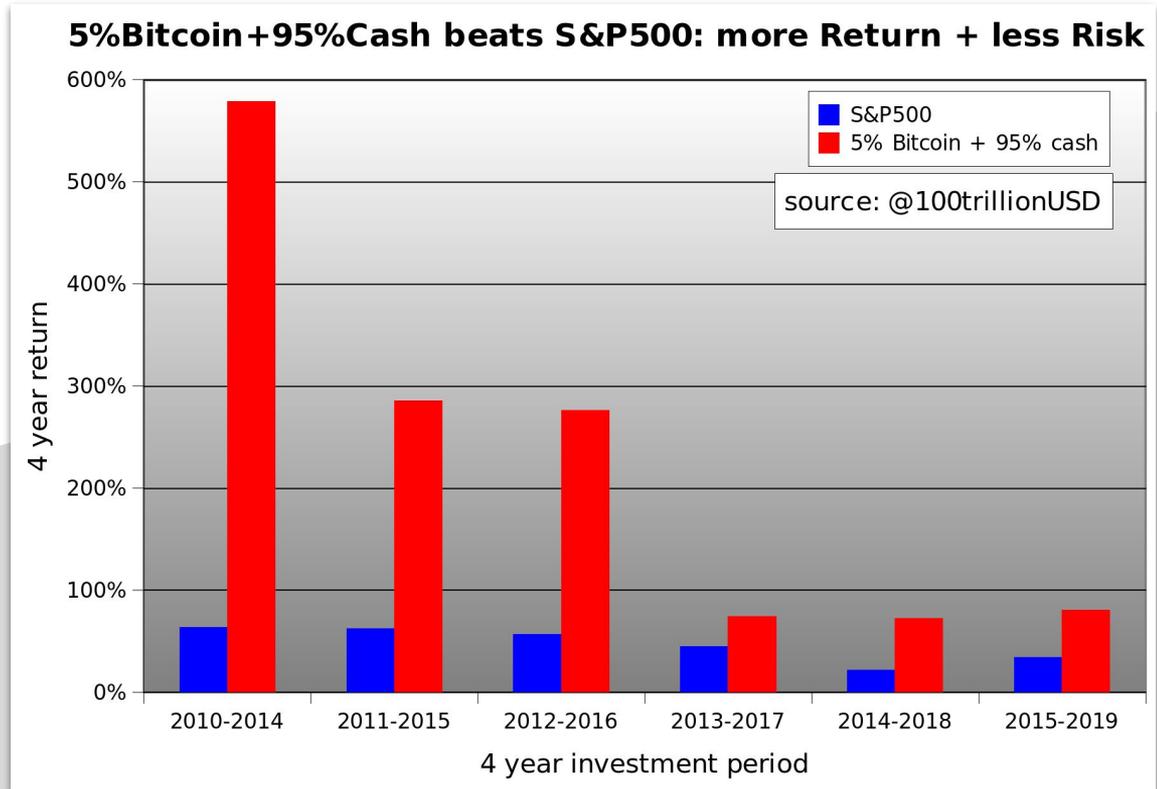

You have to forgive the politically uninitiated and other idealists who believe that there are any meaningful differences between the political right and left when it comes to government spending. After eight years of barking about “out-of-control deficit spending” and excessive executive overreach during the Obama years, those same hard right voices have suddenly fallen silent under President Trump.

But that will eventually all change. When? Literally the very same day that a Democratic President moves into the White House. Indeed, fiscal conservatives will return to their usual warnings about the debt and deficits, but only when the other side regains executive power. Until then, expect nothing but the sound of crickets from the right.

5% Bitcoin + 95% Cash Portfolio Beats S&P 500 Index Returns

While the S&P 500 has been locked in a massive Fed-inspired bull market over the last decade, holding a portfolio of just 5% in Bitcoin and 95% in U.S. dollars actually provided even better returns over several four-year time periods since 2010. This graph reveals the total returns of such a portfolio against the S&P 500.

REPORT: India Proposes 10-Year Jail Sentence For Cryptocurrency Use

A new report from Bloomberg reveals that lawmakers in India are considering a new law that would ban buying, selling, and/or mining cryptocurrencies. The proposed law, which would target those who “mine, generate, hold, sell, transfer, dispose, issue or deal in cryptocurrencies, directly or indirectly,” would not only ban cryptocurrency usage but would also result in hefty punitive measures. Those in violation could face up to a 10-year (“non-bailable”) prison sentence. India has already expressed extreme disdain for cryptocurrencies with one top government official recently calling them a “ponzi scheme.”

Ironically, India’s central bank has been weighing the release of its own digital currency in recent months, which would not be affected by this proposed law.

S&P 500 Index - Commentary

The S&P 500 index remains in a Position uptrend and continues to be supported by a Long-Term uptrend. The S&P 500 surged 4.5% last week on hopes of the first interest rate cut in a decade. The S&P 500 roared back last week enjoying its best weekly gains this year after the Federal Reserve launched a concerted and coordinated effort to boost asset values by once again shifting their stance towards current interest rate policy. Last year, Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell told investors to expect a string of interest rate hikes in 2019 due to a “strong” U.S. economy. By December, as the stock market suffered its steepest selloff in a decade, Mr. Powell suddenly changed his tune and announced that the Fed would “pause” its planned interest rate hikes in 2019. Six months later, the Fed’s policy pause has now shifted to a full-blown policy reversal as Mr. Powell assuaged investors earlier this week with promises to “act as appropriate to sustain the (economic) expansion.” (Keep reading on next page)

S&P 500 Index - Commentary

(Translation: The Fed is planning to slash interest rates, possibly as soon as this month's policy meeting scheduled for June 18,19 — and likely no later than its July meeting.) Ironically, Mr. Powell downplayed any potential chance of an interest rate cut just last month. As I have often pointed out, the primary driver of Fed policy is not economic data (as is often suggested) but asset prices. Therefore, if you want to know what the Fed is thinking at any given time, it is more instructive to monitor the S&P 500 index and longer-term bond yields than to focus on actual economic data. Turning to the charts, the price action was all bullish on moderately high volume. The S&P 500 index managed to retake its all-important 200 DMA early in the week and closed above its 50 DMA on Friday. While the price action has been topsy-turvy over the past few weeks, traders are turning bullish here as the futures markets suggest a 20% chance for an interest rate cut in June and a 70% chance by July.
